Hanson takes over Kwaj FAP

Protocol officer named SMDC rep at conference

By Peter Rejcek

Donna Hanson is not only Kwajalein's new Family Action Plan coordinator.

The USAKA/KMR protocol officer recently served as the sole representative for the Space and Missile Defense Command (SMDC) during the Army Family Action Plan (AFAP) annual conference at the McLean Hilton in Falls Church, Va.

"Col. [Gary K.] McMillen was very proud that his protocol officer was selected to represent the command," Hanson said of being chosen the SMDC representative to AFAP.

The experience will aid Hanson in the coming year as she plans to lead her first Kwaj FAP conference here, she said.

"It gave me a better understanding of how powerful and proactive the Army Family Action Plan really is," Hanson explained. "It definitely has the attention of the top Army decision makers to effect long-term changes for soldiers and their families and the civilian employees. I was impressed at how all the delegates put a 100 percent effort to make the right changes at the right times for the right reasons."

Some 125 delegates from around the world participated in the nine-day event, which covered over 100 quality of life issues that had worked their way up to the highest level of the Army command for resolution. That list was whittled down to about 27 issues that delegates decided needed the most attention.

The top issue was the Tri-Care Health Plan for military personnel,

KMR invites relatives to met rocket launch

Kwajalein Missile Range hosted special guests for the meteorological rocket launch Tuesday — family members of range personnel.

For KMR engineer Tim Kirchner it was a chance to show his five-year-old son, Graham, and eight-year-old daughter, Julianne, what he does for a living.

Both children sat wide-eyed in the KMR Control Center visitor's tower, as their father manipulated a mouse on a computer console, bringing up various views of the upcoming mission.

"It's hard to explain, so it's nice to have this opportunity," Kirchner said.

And that's the kind of opportunity range commander, Lt. Col. Ray Jones, hopes to give more people.

"We want to bring more people down here and show them why we're here," Jones said.

Around eight families participated in this first open house, filling a small conference room. Dave Conrad, mission support and data products leader, gave an unclassified briefing about the range mission, equipment and capabilities.

The met rocket launch, for example, employs a small rocket that only burns for 2.3 seconds, but flies for two minutes, reaching an altitude of 300,000 feet in the air.

"We're basically throwing a thermometer up in the sky," Conrad said.

From the thermometer that descends from the rocket, however, range crews can determine "winds aloft" speed and direction and air pressure, among other weather indicators. But Tuesday's mission had little to do with the weather.

"This is just for Y2K," Conrad said. "We want to make sure everything still works; to confirm it."

Conrad continued describing the range itself and its various components, including radars, telemetry, optics and continuing programs.

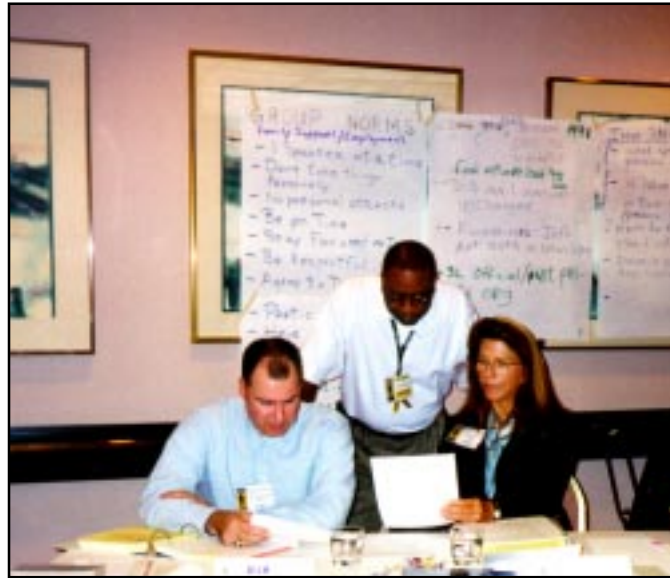

After the briefing, participants visited the control center, where they watched the final minutes of the countdown.

Several family members went outside to watch the launch.

"I've seen several (met rocket launches), but I can't actually say I've seen it," Conrad said. "It travels that fast."

Tuesday's mission was no exception. The sound of the rocket followed after the visible cloud of exhaust that must have come from the rocket, which in less than a split second escaped view.

The Kirchner kids stood by as their father pointed out the cloud and explained the rocket launch. They smiled, perhaps with a little more understanding of their father's work.

Donna Hanson represented the Space and Missile Defense Command (SMDC), as well as USAKA/KMR, at the Army Family Action Plan conference late last year in Virginia. Also attending on behalf of Kwajalein was 1st Sgt. Ozell Robertson (standing).

according to Hanson. Other high-priority issues were better quality military uniforms; eye glasses/contact lenses; giving local commanders overseas more flexibility in offering space-available dental care to retirees, Army civilians and their families; and audiovisual surveillance equipment in all child care centers.

None of the issues raised during two FAP conferences on Kwaj had reached the command level, Hanson said.

"All the issues that were brought up were either resolved or tabled for future resolution here. None had to go forward to SMDC," she explained, adding that none of the issues from SMDC were taken to the Army level. Most recently, the Kwaj FAP conference decided construction of a new chapel on Roi-Namur was top priority here.

The Family Action Plan, the brainchild of Army spouses, began about 15 years ago as a way to address quality of life issues. Over the years, some 400 FAP issues have been worked, resulting in 58 separate pieces of legislation, 125 new or revised policies and 122 programs.

But why is FAP important here?

"It gives us a chance as a whole community of soldiers and families, federal employees and the contractors to pursue low-cost, creative solutions effecting change that improve quality of life," Hanson said.

Hanson served on the Family Support/Employment Committee, which reviewed 14 issues. Additionally, all delegates discussed and voted on the five most valuable Army services they felt were indispensable should any cutbacks be required. Those services were medical/dental, housing, commissary, the Army FAP and retirement services.

Besides Hanson, 1st Sgt. Ozell Robertson also attended the conference on behalf of USAKA/KMR. Robertson was the NCOIC of operations for the conference and was the official escort for the sergeant major of the Army. Robertson, the former Kwaj FAP coordinator, PCSed last month.

Honors also befell Hanson, who was only one of five delegates chosen to sit at the head table with Gen. Eric Shinseki, Army chief of staff, and Maj. Gen. Van Antwerp, assistant chief of staff for Logistics and Housing, during a farewell luncheon.

Hanson said she will likely hold a FAP meeting on Kwaj in the summer following an Armywide mini-conference in the spring to train coordinators.

"I plan to run it the same exact way it was run in 1999. It seemed to work well," she said. "I'll try to fine-tune it some more — and get more involvement from the teens and from the Roi residents."

Residents open hearts and kitchens to Ebeye kids

(Editor's Note: One in an occasional series focusing on volunteerism by Kwajalein and Roi-Namur residents.)

Story and photos by Gwyne Copeland

Elaine Holland races around her kitchen pouring root beer floats and making sure the pizza is hot. She has dinner guests from Ebeye. Eight girls' soccer players and their coaches from Queen of Peace High School will be coming through her door any minute.

"I'm the kind of mother who likes to feed people," Holland said. "That's what they need."

The students left home at 7 a.m. They won't be home again until at least 8 p.m. It's hot, they're tired and they still have a soccer game to play.

Unlike their opponents, these students can't stop at home for a cold drink and a healthy snack before their game starts at 5:15 p.m. Instead, they rely on the kindness of Kwaj residents.

"It means a lot. I think they are generous people. It helps our game a lot to be filled before playing," Christina DeBrum said.

Holland is just one of many people on Kwaj who prepares snacks or meals for girls' and boys' teams throughout the school year.

"I just love them; they're so sweet and grateful," Holland said

Brigitte Kennedy fed the girls' softball team last season and coordinated meals for the boys' team.

"You do what you can. When you think about how much we have and how little they have," Kennedy said during a recent interview.

Eric Graham is the team's coach. He said he appreciates the women who open their homes and hearts to his students.

"It's probably the best part of the experience. The girls have a lot of fun playing soccer, but seeing that they're fed everyday is the best for me," he said.

The students have a long day when they come to Kwaj. With only a small meal of rice and corned beef or tuna for lunch, they need to eat before playing.

Over the years many people have helped feed the students. But according to Kennedy, the volunteers need help.

"It could be as little as donating $5 or $10," Kennedy said, adding people don't have to make an entire meal. Children would also appreciate a bag of oranges or a plate of cookies, as well.

"These kids don't have parents at the games to provide a snack," Kennedy noted.

To volunteer to prepare some food for the students or make a donation, call Brigitte Kennedy at 52641 or Elaine Holland at 53717.

KRC millennium event attracts 270 people

By Jim Bennett

When Cheryl Green and Megan Cummings crossed the finish line New Year's Eve at Emon Beach pavilion, they walked into a new millennium.

The pair finished the Kwajalein Running Club's annual two-mile run-walk only seconds before midnight, taking top honors in the adult and student categories, respectively.

But it was the families who truly won, enjoying an evening of celebration for the new year.

"It was great to have all the families there together," said Peter Barbella.

The event attracted 270 registered runners and walkers.

The two-mile course tracked along Pacific Street to Sixth Street to Ocean Road, around new housing to Lagoon Road and back to Emon.

According to Bob Sholar, organizer of the event, the running club has run-walked in the new year for around 20 years now. The new millennium brought more participants and more party favors than usual, but retained the annual festive family atmosphere, with DJ Neil "The Driver" Dye spinning tunes and food filling the tables.

Marshallese form new government

By Peter Rejcek

The Republic of the Marshall Islands greeted the new millennium by electing a new president on Monday.

Kessai H. Note, former speaker of the Nitijela (RMI Parliament) and member of the United Democratic Party (UDP), is expected to be inaugurated Monday. Cabinet ministers chosen by the president-elect will also be installed then.

Note, 49, will replace President Imata Kabua, who seconded the UDP candidate's nomination for RMI president during Monday's vote. The RMI president is elected from among the 33 members of the Nitijela. Note is the first RMI president who is not an iroij or traditional chief.

Lt. Col Steve Beal, chief of the USAKA/KMR Host Nation office, said the election should have little effect on U.S.-RMI relations.

"From our standpoint it was very encouraging that they had a very orderly election," he said. "It was a peaceful, orderly, democratic transition of government, which is what we espouse around the world ... but very rarely do you see it work."

Hiram Malolo, RMI representative to USAKA on Kwajalein, said it is too early to know how his country will be affected by the change in government.

"It's hard to tell," he said. "We're in transition."

Roi-Namur residents celebrated New Year's Eve with a variety of activities, from a night dive to a millennium walk to a fancy pupu buffet at the Outrigger Club.

"We had a great hors d'oeuvre dinner," said Karin Robas, superintendent of Roi Community Activities. About 50 attended the dinner, which included popcorn shrimp and teriyaki chicken.

KSC greets New Year under water

By Peter Rejcek

While much of Kwajalein celebrated New Year's Eve in the traditional way — with festive feasting and the pouring of libations — some residents went a different direction.

Below water, that is.

About 27 divers took part in the Kwajalein Scuba Club's millennium dive. The 30-minute night dive took place shortly before midnight at the ski area wreck dive site in about 45 feet of water.

"It was a lovely, beautiful dive with the glowsticks and dive lights glowing," said diver Ivy Springer. "It was a perfect spot to be for this special occasion. We saw a large grouper on the bow and a beautiful lionfish swimming off to a nearby coral head."

A buzzer sounded at five and two minutes before midnight to warn divers of the approaching deadline. At one minute before midnight, divers turned off their flashlights and ascended to the surface to greet the new year.

"I'll always remember what I did at the changeover at the millennium," diver Jude Allbrandt exclaimed.

A party at the Scuba Shack followed the historical dive. About 50 people attended the party, according to Allbrandt.

Participants in the dive received commemorative medals and fanny packs.

The event was chiefly organized by Ivy Springer and Ron Gamble.

English visitor sad to leave Kwajalein

By Peter Rejcek

The list of places on Liz Reece's travel resumé read like an issue of National Geographic: India, Texas, Iraq, Scotland, Bahrain, Malaysia and Europe.

But Kwajalein has won a special place in the 24-year-old Londoner's heart.

"I love it. I want to live here. It made me realize I can't live in London," she said in that crisp accent that makes the American tongue sound barbarous. "Everybody should be able to do this — just roll out of bed and dive."

Reece leaves Kwaj Friday after a three-week stay, which included scuba diving, golfing, fishing and sunsets.

"Everybody on Kwajalein has been really fantastic, very receptive hosts," said Craig McCarraher, chief engineer at AFRTS and Reece's sponsor on island.

The decision to spend the millennium rollover on Kwaj was made in April, Reece said.

"I didn't want to spend the millennium regretting not planning something," she explained, adding a return trip to Kwaj is in the future.
